Nagypall/Pahl, just a village near Pécs in the Baranya-district, Hungary, 440 inhabitants, two streets, two churches, two languages, one kindergarten and one school, two pubs and two little shops.

A Dutch couple took up residence there and started, fascinated by this new world, to take pictures, to look around and listen to the people and recording their impressions on tiny sheets of paper.

The village became very special for them.

The photographs made by Eddy Smid, the impressions, written down by Frouke Schouwstra, together with the many many old pictures provided for by the people of Nagypall themselves, resulted in a moving picture- and readingbook, a very special report of a slow and careful process of integration, a very special image of a small Hungarian village.

A book for everybody with ties in Nagypall, but also for photography-lovers, for Hungarians abroad, for foreigners who fell in love with Hungary, for everybody who, like the composers, is fascinated by small and modest everyday things, wherever in the world :
